Editorial Review

From the Back Cover

"A challenge to church bodies that feel rejection of Anabaptist-Mennonite teachings is essential for growth. Redekop shows that a strong self-conscious identity is essential to forward movement." Katie Funk Wiebe, Professor Emeritus, Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kansas

"A fascinating mixture of historical narrative, sociological analysis, and moral passion. Through it runs a theme of irony and a sober warning. Redekop's story of the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren shows that church revitalization can come at the high cost of losing original core values." James C. Juhnke, Professor of History, Bethel (Kan.) College

"Redekop skillfully combines sociological analysis and the historical narrative of this small group to make its story archetypal of many Christian reform movements." Paul Toews, Professor of History, Fresno (Calif.) Pacific University, in the Foreword

"Redekop's masterful treatment of the story of how and why this group abandoned its Anabaptist commitments becomes a valuable case study of small reform movements that lose their way while seeking to survive in the marketplace of American religion." William Vance Trollinger, Jr., Associate Professor of History, University of Dayton (Oh.)

About the Author

Sociologist Dr. Calvin W. Redekop, Harrisonburg, Virginia, has taught at Conrad Grebel College (Ontario) and Goshen (Ind.) College. "The relatively unknown EMB story is not as insignificant as it may appear. This is because it provides a remarkable example of one movement's experience which yields considerable insights into all movements desiring religious reawakening or recovery." Calvin W. Redekop, in the Preface
